DAVIES OFFICE

We Are America's Office Solution Provider

For over 70 years, Davies has been at the forefront of the sustainability movement. Sustainability has always been, and will always be crucial to our mission because we recognize the harmful environmental impacts that waste can have on the environment.

We remain the top environmentally friendly remanufacturer of office furniture in the country today and have the research to prove it. Whether you want to plan an environmentally sustainable workspace or incorporate eco-friendly furniture, Davies is qualified to get the job done.

Our Sustainable Process

A typical business employs a linear model of 'take-make-waste' production. Here at Davies, we employ a circular business model where emphasis is put on creating, capturing existing product, and delivering value with improved resource efficiency through extending the useful life of products and parts and closing material loops.

We pride ourselves on the ability create solutions for any problem a client comes to us with and make the conscious effort to use existing product to get the job done. We can create everything from a fully customized new office layout to custom office furniture upgrades and retrofits to existing furniture you're not quite done with yet.

End Of Life Process

So how do we handle waste? If the product/parts can be used, we store it for future projects to keep from buying new stock. With what is left we strive to reach a zero landfill, 100% recycled approach, but there are still times where we need to dispose of excess unusable materials. To minimize what goes to landfill, we have developed an entire process around our End of Life Recovery for every single part and piece that goes into our office furniture. View our End of Life Recovery Options document on our website DaviesOffice.com under our Sustainable Practices tab for more information.

To learn more about the environmental impact Davies remanufacturing has on the environment check out the 2016 RIT (Rochester Institute of Technology) environmental impact of remanufacturing case study. This study found that remanufacturing of furniture components significantly reduced the overall environmental impacts. Read the full study on DaviesOffice.com.

What is Remanufacturing?

Remanufacturing office furniture means taking what companies no longer think they have a use for and breathing new life into it. Office managers turn to warehousing, selling and throwing away what they think can't be used. Here at Davies we take those worn and non-functional products and bring them back to like-new or even better-than-new condition, with a lifetime warranty. This means that every element of the piece of furniture is updated, given fresh finishes and new technology. Everything we do, from the products we deliver to the services we offer, are intended to make the most of existing resources while doing the least harm to our planet.

How Do We Get The Job Done?

Everything starts with a company wanting to move spaces or revamp their existing space. Then our expert design team collaborates with them to create their ideal office space. Interior design plays a huge role in the culture, functionality, and creativity of your office. If you want something amazing that fits your budget and style; our design team is waiting to help guide you toward the best collaborative design and pricing options for all your office furniture needs.

Production

After the design process has been completed, we take existing products from our inventory and begin to dismantle and strip it down to its core materials, sand off the paint, and remove the fabric.

Next, we repair each component. Our team starts by removing dents and replacing any core parts or materials that may have been damaged to ensure a high-quality product. Finally, we reassemble each product back together to create a finished product that is indistinguishable from new furniture products — but at a fraction of the price and fully customized to your unique specifications.
